ADAPT FOOD TO THE SEASON. - Many spring discuses are the natural and legitimate result of excess of food, or more than the stomach can bear at this season of the year, with a radical change in the temperature. To understand this let it be remembered that we have a winter and summer appetite, depending on temperature, and that in cold weather a large per centage of our food is exhausted merely in sus* taining the heat of the body, which must be kept at about 98 degrees Fahrenheit, or life can but be preserved.

Indeed in the coldest weather, to supply this animal heat, about four times as much of this fuel food is needed, as that for the muscles, or to give strength and general health. It is also true that there is the same propriety in the selection of the kind of food for summer and winter, as in the adaptation of our clothing for the same season. In the winter the appetite is especially urgent for the sweets of all kinds, the cils, as butter. fat meat, etc. In the spring and summer such articles are not needed, and should be avoided or indulged in very spaningly.
